WESTFORD -- The J.V. Fletcher Library launched the Westford Job Seekers Network yesterday afternoon.

The event will take place 2-3:30 p.m. every Wednesday.

Recruiters and guest speakers within the field of career development will be on hand each week to guide the unemployed toward employment.

There will also be an opportunity to spruce up resumes and network with other people in and out of the job market.

"Because of the unemployment rate right now, we decided this was something we needed in Westford," explained Dina Kanabar, who is in charge of the new program.

Kanabar believes the local library is a great resource for those who are out of work. People can use their computers to search for opportunities, type up their resumes and print out copies.

"It's free for everyone. People should come in for networking, socializing, recruiting and just help finding a job in general," she said.
